Continuing threat for isolated t-storms and rain

There has been very little change to the upper level pattern the last few days as large scale troughing exists to our west across CA with the Monsoon ridge suppressed to our southeast. General steering flow is out of the south/southwest and elevated moisture/instability remains in place across the eastern half of the state. That being said, expecting daily t-storm chances to continue around the region with most of the activity across the higher terrain of eastern AZ with storms more isolated in nature across the lower deserts of southcentral AZ (i.e. a continuation of what we saw over the weekend)...
